LUNCHTIME SEMINAR

Guardian journalist , Gary Younge talks about his latest book
Who Are We? - and should it matter in the twenty-first century?

IAS MR 2/3

Tuesday March 8th 1.00pm - 2.30pm

What does it mean to call yourself British in the 21st century?

Moving between fascinating memoir and searing analysis, and reporting on everything from a beauty contest in Ireland to South African townships, Younge shows how many citizens of the modern world – from the American conservative to the Islamic fundamentalist, from the established elite to the second-generation immigrant – are now retreating into their personal identities as a means of survival in the face of a state seemingly indifferent to their lives. In an argument that is brilliantly observed and deeply impassioned, Younge urges us to halt this retreat, to search for a common, higher ground, or be prepared to see a society more dangerously divided than ever before.
